

AHPRA-registered Doctors for Chronic Pain

Complex pain needs a doctor who has the whole picture.

Chronic pain is rarely just one symptom with one simple cause. It can involve multiple conditions, changing symptoms, long medical histories, and care from several practitioners.

At Pain Clinic Australia, our AHPRA-registered doctors form the medical backbone of your personalised pain care plan.

They bring your symptoms, medical history, current medicines, previous care, and wider health picture together. This helps your PCA team make informed decisions as your needs change.

Get comprehensive care that keeps up with your pain.

When Pain Has a Long History

You shouldn't have to compress years of pain into a rushed appointment.

Some patients come to us after years of specialist appointments, conflicting explanations, and incomplete relief despite ongoing care. Others are still living with pain after the original injury or condition has already been addressed.

Your medical history can become complicated quickly when symptoms persist.

Our doctors take the time to understand what has already been tried, what helped, what didn't, and what has changed since.

Why Our Doctors Are Thorough

Chronic pain can become harder to understand as your medical history grows. Looking at each symptom or appointment in isolation may leave important context behind.

A detailed medical review helps your doctor build a clearer picture of where you are now. Depending on your needs, this may involve:

Reviewing your complete pain history

Your doctor will explore how your pain began, how it has progressed, and how it affects your daily life. Previous diagnoses, investigations, procedures, and clinical recommendations can also provide valuable context.

Looking at what you've already tried

You may have already seen several doctors or specialists before reaching Pain Clinic Australia. Understanding your previous care helps your doctor avoid looking at your pain as though you are starting from zero.

Considering your current medicines

Your doctor can review the medicines you currently take alongside your wider medical history. This includes considering potential interactions, side effects, and other factors relevant to your ongoing care.

Connecting changing symptoms

Chronic pain doesn't always stay the same. New symptoms, changing pain patterns or shifts in your overall health may affect what needs attention next.

Listening to your experience

A scan, test result or diagnosis doesn't always capture the full impact of persistent pain. Our consultations are designed to give you room to explain what you're experiencing and how it has changed your life.

What Happens During Your Consultation?

Your first consultation is about understanding the whole medical picture.

Your doctor will review your current symptoms, relevant health history, and previous care before discussing the next steps. Your consultation may include:

- Discussing where your pain is located and how it behaves
- Reviewing how long your symptoms have been present

- Exploring diagnoses and underlying health conditions
- Looking at previous approaches and their outcomes
- Reviewing current medicines and potential interactions
- Discussing side effects or tolerability concerns
- Considering changes in symptoms over time
- Looking at how pain affects sleep, movement, mood and daily function
- Identifying areas that may need input from another member of your care team
- Planning appropriate medical follow-up

You aren't expected to have a perfectly organised medical story before you arrive.

Bring what you know. We will work through the bigger picture with you.

A Team Dedicated Around Your Pain

Living with chronic pain means dealing with a condition that can be complex and unpredictable.

Chronic pain can affect your physical health, movement, mood, nutrition, relationships, and everyday function. A single appointment with a single discipline may not capture all of that.

Our doctors leads a multidisciplinary pain care framework that can bring together:

- Medical care with an AHPRA-registered doctor
- Psychotherapy for the emotional and psychological impact of persistent pain
- Physiotherapy for movement, mobility, and physical function
- Dietetics and nutrition for personalised meal planning
- Pain Management Coordination for ongoing follow-ups

Each clinician brings expertise from their own discipline. Your doctor maintains the broader medical view while your team works towards a care plan built around the same person: you.

Note: Intimacy counselling is also available as an additional service for patients whose pain affects physical closeness, confidence or relationships.

Your PMC Keeps Things Moving

Good chronic pain care doesn't stop when the consultation ends.

Your Pain Management Coordinator (PMC) helps keep the different parts of your care connected between appointments.

Regular check-ins give you an opportunity to discuss symptoms, changes, and concerns as they arise. Relevant updates can then be shared with your clinical team so your care doesn't rely on you remembering everything at your next appointment.

The goal is continuity; not starting from scratch at every appointment.

Frequently Asked Questions

What if I've already seen several doctors?

That is common among people living with long-term or complex chronic pain. Your previous consultations, investigations, and care can provide useful context. Our doctors will consider what has already happened rather than assuming your pain story begins with us.

What if my underlying condition is already being managed?

You may still need support for persistent pain even when the underlying condition is receiving appropriate medical care. Your primary care doctor can consider your chronic pain within the wider context of your existing health and current medical team.

What if I've already tried several approaches?

Previous approaches are an important part of your medical history. Your doctor will want to understand what you've already tried, how you responded, and whether side effects or other issues affected your experience.

Will my medical plan always stay the same?

Not necessarily. Chronic pain and your wider health can change over time. Ongoing review allows your doctor to consider adjustments based on your response, symptoms, tolerability, and current needs.

Can PCA work with my existing doctors?

Yes, where appropriate. Our team can work alongside your existing healthcare providers so that your chronic pain care can take your wider medical needs into account.

Are consultations online?

Yes, PCA provides its consultations through telehealth. This allows you to speak with your care team from home while maintaining ongoing medical review and multidisciplinary support.

Bring the Whole Story With You

You may have spent years moving between appointments, specialists, and different approaches without finding enough relief.

You may also be tired of explaining the same complicated medical history from the beginning every time you meet someone new.

We want to understand where you've already been before deciding where your care goes next.

We'll start with a thorough medical assessment. From there, your PCA team will help build and adapt an evolving pain care plan around your needs!
